THE MARIGOLD.

The violet sweet I dearly love,
The pink, the pansy bold,
The blush rose, but all flowers above
I love the Marigold.

Fair flower, that in a time of old
Didst give thy heart away
To him who from his sphere of gold
Does give to mortals day!

Alas! for love he gave thee not,
Full vainly thou didst sue—
Unhappy shall I name thy lot,
Or call thy love too true?

The god who changed thee to a flower
Hath left thy heart the same;
Still dost thou show his beauty's power
In hue of orange flame.

Still dost thou lift thy drooping head
To catch his eye's bright ray,
And when his light no more is shed
Thy beauty fades away.

Poor Marigold! I love the well,
And most because, like me,
Thou hast a woeful tale to tell
Of grief and constancy.

The violet sweet I dearly love,
The pink, the pansy bold,
The bluish rose, but all flowers above
I love the Marigold.
—Gentleman's Magazine.

STORM SHADOWS.

Last June and July I had been taking too much out of myself. Beside the ordinary drudgery at the museum I was in a hurry to get my novel finished. I don't know how it is with men who spin their brains habitually, but after a hard day's work the effort of creation (save the mark), though it is pleasant at the time and does not seem to cost me anything, leaves all my nerves jarring.

In July we went down to the cottage on the river, and I wrote harder than ever till I got into a morbidly irritable and unreasonable state. I was always nursing some grievance; expecting Lucy to divine wishes I never really felt, and deliberately silent on things I wanted done, that I might fancy a grudge because they were not seen to without my asking. She, poor soul, was wonderfully patient, but naturally it depressed her, and now and then she broke down. That always brought me to my senses, and there would be a redintegratio amoris. Still it was a strained, unhappy sort of time.

On Sunday, July 20, I had been writing all the morning, and not to my satisfaction, so that I was very despondent about things in general. In the afternoon Lucy suggested that we should go to service at St. Peter's school, which is near us, and where they have a reputation for their singing. The day had been sultry and lowering, and at 4 o'clock when we went in a thunderstorm was obviously coming up. I remember well a curious, heavy effect of sunshine on the blue mass of vapor.

Lucy went up into the gallery, and I was put into the stalls on the north side. Next to me was one of the masters. His face struck me as he walked up the aisle. I never saw so fine a human being. Very tall—two or three inches, probably, over the six feet, and with that look of supple strength that a man gets from constant athletic games. But the head was the thing—a long oval face with olive tint, long, straight hair as soft as a woman's and silky black mustache. He might have walked out of a Lionardo picture, if Lionardo had ever painted a Hippolytus, for this young man looked as if nothing had ever occurred to disturb the supremacy of cricket and football in his mind.

But I was in that overstrung temper when one cannot command one's thoughts, and mine flew off in self criticism. I had staked all my hopes on succeeding with this novel, and the more I reflected the more I was convinced of my own futility. Impotent ambition that recognizes its own impotence is a very pretty purgatory, and to indulge in unpleasant meditations in a hot church on a sultry July afternoon, with no prospect of liberation for an hour, is an indulgence I commend to no one.

The storm was coming up fast, and the day had grown fearfully dark, while the air, heavily charged with electricity, became more and more oppressive. The thunder was growling away in the Thames valley, coming nearer with every roll. Opposite me was a row of stained glass windows. I remember their stupid sage greens and thin reds and blues so well. But they were open at top to catch a breath of air, and I looked out on to the leaden sky.

I was in that nervous, twitching frame of mind that makes you hear steps in a house by night, and for the first time in my life I began to speculate on the possibilities of danger. Suddenly there came a really awful flash and burst just above us—I saw the reader start as he was walking up the aisle to begin the lesson. Lucy is timid about thunder, and I looked up toward the gallery to see that she was not fainting. As I raised my eyes there came another flash across the open window, so intense and forked and wickedly quivering that it dazed me and printed itself on the eyeball that saw nothing else.

Suddenly — quicker than I could say it—came the thought that I was blinded. I put my head on my hand to ease the pain in the eye—we were sitting of course while the lesson went on—and a cold fear took hold of me. I supposed that the thermometer was at 100, but I shivered with a chill running down my spine, and the sweat on my forehead was cold to my hand. Before I ventured to look up I knew that the sight was gone, and when I raised my head it was all red darkness before me, full of hoops and circles that grew incessantly into one another, like rings in water, standing out before me and receding into space.

Then I began to reflect how I was to get out of church and meet Lucy. There were steps and turns, and I could not bear the thought of a scene. Besides, I had my ideas about Lucy. I wanted to break it to her in my own way. I wanted, in plain truth, to lay a trap to catch her inmost thoughts—the first cry of her heart. I was not delirious; I was as sane as I had been for weeks past. Now I would see if she could be all to me that I could fancy. That was what I thought. How sane I was I do not know.

The service was of an appalling length. It outlasted the storm. Meantime I was ripening my plan. If my man would help me, it was feasible. When the sermon ended—great heavens! how I commented on that sermon, though it was nothing but a string of inoffensive platitudes, but it ended at last, and I took my neighbor by the sleeve.

"Look here," I whispered, "I want you to help me out. Do you mind waiting for the voluntary?" They have a sort of recital there after the boys have gone out. He nodded, I suppose, for I heard nothing and had to ask again.

"Yes, all right," he said. He had a pleasant voice.

I steadied myself a bit during the hymn, but then came a collection. That was the first thing that brought the feeling of helplessness in on me. I had to ask to be touched when the bag came. This and the fumbling way in which I handed it told the tale to my neighbor.

"Pardon me," he whispered, "but aren't you blind?"

"Blinded?" I replied, and I felt his start. Then I explained to him that I had a wife there and did not wish the shock to come on her too suddenly and wanted him to see me home.

I fancy he thought me crazy.

"All right," he said, "I'll do my best. But you must explain fully."

"Your name is Bedford," I said, "and you knew me intimately in Paris five years ago."

"But I never was in Paris," he replied.

We tried other places. Finally Lausanne was pitched on. I was to go out on his arm and introduce him to Lucy.

"You had better tell which is your wife, if you can," he said.

"There are four women there," he said.

I made him describe them to me. Lucy was the third. I am so unobservant about dress that I could not be sure till he described her features roughly. It is a very odd sensation to hear another man describe your wife to you, especially if he calls her beautiful in an apologetic sort of way. I should have been vexed if he had said "pretty." Yet somehow the other word made me catch my breath.

As the voluntary ended he told me when Lucy got up to go, and we stumbled into the isle while she could not see us.

Lucy met us in the vestibule. He had to nudge me when she came. Luckily, she spoke first.

"What a storm! And you looked deathly ill."

"It was pretty bad," I said, "but let me introduce Mr. Bedford, of whom I have talked so often."

Then we walked homeward. Lucy made talk about boating with the young man. He was dreadfully embarrassed in his tone, and no wonder. I cut in now and then with leading questions about the people we had known, or rather I had known in Switzerland. But he was very resourceless in lying, and I had to give it up for fear of a revelation. Besides, my head was dizzy with walking on in the dark, expecting every moment to stumble. I was afraid, too, that Lucy's suspicions might be roused by my taking his arm. I am not demonstrative in my ways with men.

Happily the footpath was empty, but about half way home we met some women—I think they were all women from the rustle of their dresses—and had to steer clear of them. In my nervousness I ran my supporter hard into a lamppost.

"My dear boy," Lucy cried out, "Mr. Bedford won't appreciate your affection at this rate. Have you lost your eyes?"

We got home without further accident, and I put my hand on the open door. Lucy was urgent with our friend to stay and have tea. "Never mind your work," she said. "We shall think you are in a hurry to see the last of us."

It was evident enough to me that the poor fellow desired nothing more ardently than to be gone and was only anxious decently to conceal it. Lucy's hospitable effusion seemed to me excessive. However, at last he made his excuses definitely.

"At least you will let us see you again soon," said Lucy. The phrase struck me.

"Yes," I said, "certainly. You must let us see you again. Come any time. All hours are alike to me—day or night. Must you go, then? Thanks for coming so far with us. Lucy, won't you give Mr. Bedford a rose to requite him?"

You would not believe what it cost me to say that. But I had to make some shift to get her eyes off me while I stumbled into the drawing room and groped my way to an armchair.

"Now for it," I thought.

Very likely you don't enter into my state of mind—how should you? I knew perfectly that Lucy took this man for Bedford, who was one of my best friends. Indeed she had seen me, so to say, parade my affection by walking arm in arm—she could not have been other than gracious to him. Yet, you see, I was concentrated on my one idea. She must spare me the pain and humiliation of telling her that I was blind. Good heavens! I thought, surely she might have apprehended from my voice or from my look that I needed her consolation.

I was raging against her slowness to observe (she tells me now that I had looked so distracted in the morning that there was not much change apparent). And there was the devil in me prompting me to think that but for this man's good looks she would have been forced to notice my distress. I was determined not to ask her pity. All wish to spare her a shock had gone clean from me.

She came in and threw herself down on the sofa, exhausted with the heat.

"Well," she said, "I must say you never prepared me for such a fine young man. Perfectly my ideal. But isn't he surprisingly shy?"

"Certainly," I replied, "he left you to make the running."

I said it with a laugh, I know, but it was not pleasantly said. She looked at me then, I suppose, for the first time.

"Why, what is the matter? You are as white as a sheet."

"Oh, it's nothing," I said. "That place was overpowering."

Lucy asked me to open the window. I had not reckoned on that. But I knew there was an open space from the chair I sat in across the room, so I rose and walked forward as confidently as I could. Unluckily, there was one of these little toy tables in the way. I tripped over it and nearly fell.

"Bless the boy!" Lucy cried out. "Why, what is the matter? You nearly carried away a lamppost on the way home, and now you are breaking the furniture."

I turned round and said with all the sting I could put into my voice:

"My dear child, if I am suffering for having accompanied you to your devotions, is that a reason you should snap at me?"

I was only sorry I could not think of something memorably savage to say. But the tone was enough. I heard her turn on the sofa and begin to sob. Then a great remorse seized me. I forgot myself and made to go to her. But in the stumble I had lost my bearings, so I walked crash into the table and instinctively I put out my hand to feel my way.

Lucy saw me. She sprang up and screamed and caught me in her arms. "Oh, what is it? What is it?"

She drew me to the sofa and held me there. "Say it isn't that—not that," she was sobbing out.

The hardness in my heart was melting like ice, and there was a great lump in my throat. But the devil in me made one last effort. "So you have found me out at last. Really a handsome young man is a capital screen!"

I felt her flinch, but she drew my head closer to her, for all I could say. "Oh, my poor boy, my poor boy, and I never guessed."

I struggled to get free, but in a moment I broke down, and then I was crying like a child, sobbing against her throbbing breast.

It was she who recovered first. Then I learned what it was to have a wife who cared for you. I had never been nursed or taken care of since I was a boy, and of us two I had been always the self reliant one. But that night I slept while she watched beside me. She read my heart to me as if it had been a book—all the old quarrels, the old fancied grievances and the shutting up of my heart against her—and blamed herself, poor soul, for dullness because she had not sooner understood it. I was almost happy before I slept that night.

Next day we saw the doctor. He tried some severe tests on my eyes that hurt me, but there was something in the tone of his questions that I could not understand. When he told me that there was hope I might recover from the shock, I was perfectly certain he did not mean just what he said, and I told him to let me know the worst. But he persisted. Then I tried to cross examine him on his reasons, but he put me off with technical terms. That convinced me he was keeping back something, and he stupidly confirmed my suspicions by asking to see Lucy alone about the treatment. It ended, as I heard since, in his writing her his view of the case.

Things grew very much worse with me in a short while. The first day of blindness is not the worst. It is like prison, I fancy. The torture increases continually till the nerves are deadened to it.

I tried dictating to Lucy, but that failed hopelessly. The medium interposed seemed to paralyze the power of expression. No doubt in course of time I might have mastered the difficulty, but I could not steady myself to the effort.

Then I tried writing with my own hand. Lucy persuaded me she could read it. She used to sit by me and keep the lines straight, or tell me she did so. I have got nearly half a volume that I wrote in this way—of course quite undecipherable now. But it brought on the crisis. Try to write with your eyes shut for a minute or two, and you will see what a strain it is upon the nerves. Mine gave way, as you know. We had worked six hours like this one day, poor Lucy in agonies and imploring me to stop, yet afraid to thwart me. That night I could not sleep, and toward morning delirium set in. The doctors tell me there is no such thing as brain fever, but it is a good descriptive term for the illness that followed.

As I understand from what Lucy tells me, when the fever first left me I was sane enough, but my memory was gone. I could see perfectly. Then as memory began to return there came a struggle with the old delusion, and a relapse followed. "Last," as Tennyson says, "I woke sane, but well nigh close to death," and by a fortunate inspiration they had kept me in the dark. Else, I think, the shock of returning consciousness would have frightened away my fluttering life. It was Lucy who explained it all to me in the silent watches of the night, little by little, as I could bear it. Poor Lucy! I found her first gray hair as she bent over me a day or two afterward. But I pulled it out, and now it is the only memento of my blindness.

The doctors call it hysteria, which they say can simulate anything, and in such cases of simulated blindness it is often almost impossible to distinguish the false from the true, the eye acting under tests almost as it would if really incapable of sight. Hysteria is an ugly, womanish word. For my own part, I would as soon say insanity. And I am sure any jury would give Lucy license to get rid of me. But she does not want it. —S. L. Gwynn in Black and White.

Plenty to See.

Here is an episcopal story. Bishop Williams of Connecticut is the hero and Scotland the place of action.

It seems that over in Scotland the rector of a parish is called the "incumbent" and his curate the "locum tenens."

One day Bishop Williams was dropped from the stagecoach in a little Gaelic town in which the only respectable looking house was the parsonage. The bishop felt that he could not enter the wretched, dingy one story inn, and he determined to beg from the rector a night's lodging, on the score of his Episcopal dignity. So he marched boldly up to the door of the parsonage and knocked. His knock was answered by a wrinkled old Scotchwoman, who looked for all the world like Meg Merrilies, with an added score of years on her head. She glanced cannily and suspiciously at the bishop, holding the door half way open.

"Is the rector in, my good woman?" asked the bishop.

"No, surr," came the answer in the inimitable Scotch brogue. "E'm sorry to see that the incoombrance is oot, but if ye like ye can see the local demon."—Boston Budget.

Spontaneous Combustion.

A writer in American Notes and Queries, who discusses the nonprobability of spontaneous combustion to rum soaked people, has the following to say in regard to the matter:

"There is one trivial obstacle in the way of explaining certain cases of spontaneous human combustion that is not usually taken into consideration by those who favor such a theory. A human body weighing 150 pounds contains about 110 pounds of water. Moreover, it requires about four pounds of alcohol to evaporate one pound of water. Hence to merely desiccate a human body, something like 450 pounds, or not far from 45 gallons, of alcohol would be required, while to incinerate the body three or four times that amount would be necessary, or say a volume several times as great as the entire volume of the average sized body."

This communication is signed "Trois Etoiles." I wonder if "Trois" ever stopped to consider the fact that all the water of the body must be replaced by alcohol before spontaneous combustion can be possible? —St. Louis Republic.

Ask a Policeman.

A little negro does the waiting and errand running of a fashionable boarding house on West Fourth street. He is not very well posted about Cincinnati and Cincinnati ways, as his home is in the country. The lady in charge of the house made some purchases at the Woman's Exchange and left them, with instructions that she would send her colored boy for them. Sam received instructions as to the name and location and started. But the noise and hurry of the street upset his limited supply of reasoning faculties, and he was barely able to reach home, leaving his errand undone.

The lady said in surprise: "Why, what was the matter, Sam? Couldn't you find the place?" "No'm," said Sam. "I done looked, and after a bit I axed a policeman whah de Ladies' Trade was, and he said he blamed if he knew, and den I cum back. For if a policeman didn't know duh wan't no use for a niggah boy like me to hunt."—Cincinnati Tribune.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

"He who laughs last laughs best," is certainly true of the present situation in the Senate. What appeated to almost everybody an impossibility a week ago—the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law—is now apparntly as good as accomplished. President Cleveland is credited with having individually brought about this radical change but the cold facts in the case will hardly bear that construction. It is admitted that the change was brought about by the announcement of the silver leaders that they would no longer use obstructive tactics to prevent the taking of a vote. Why did they make that announcement? Let one of them—Senator Dubois—answer that question: "We prefer unconditional repeal to any compromise that we could get, either from the Democratic repealers or the Republican repealers If we had accepted compromise and the expected good times had failed to follow its adoption the people at large would have saddled the blame upon the silver men. Now, if they do not come the people will see that it was not the silver law that made hard times."

"That the result, however attained, will add largely to Mr. Cleveland's personal prestige, already greater than that enjoyed by many of his predecessors, is as certain as anything in the future can be, and it is not strange that he and his personal followers should feel correspondingly elated. Every man likes to have his side win. But its future effect upon his party may be far from satisfactory, although it is expected to help in the coming state elections in New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts. Unless shrewd observers in all parties are very much mistaken it will have a contrary effect in the West and South, unless some later legislation favorable to silver shall be adopted by this Congress. Unless there is something to distract public attention from the question before the next Congressional election it is the opinion of unprejudiced men that the Populists will make very large gains in the West and South, taking votes from the Democrats in the South and from both Democrats and Republicans in the West, on account of unconditional repeal."

The House has been doing business without a quorum this week, by tactic consent of its members, so many of them are absent, taking part in the State campaigns. No objection was raised to the passing of the Richardson public printing bill without a quorum, nor to the consideration of the bankruptcy bill which has taken up the rest of the week, but it will be different next week when the Voorhees bill gets before the House. A quorum will be required then and it is certain that it will have to be made up entirely of repealers.

If the Voorhees bill can be safely steered through all the various amendment snags—it may run aground upon any one of four or five of them—it is expected that Congress will immediately adjourn, as most of the members are anxious to take a little vacation before the opening of the regular session.

No better indication of the dullness of business throughout the country has been given than the recent large falling off in the postal revenues. The sale of postage stamps shows the condition of business as correctly as a barometer shows the state of the weather.

Representative McKeighan of Nebraska is after Secretary Morton with a sharp stick, because of the attack he made in his recent World's Fair speech on farmers' organizations taking part in public matters. Here is a specimen of the way Mr. McKeighan, who is a practical farmer as well as a Congressman, gets back at the Secretary: "It is indeed refreshing to find one who has gained his only national fame through forestry societies condeming Farmers Alliance and Grange organizations. He seems morbidly afraid to have the farmers express themselves on any subject except that of plowing or sowing. It is wrong, in his opinion, for this class, embracing one-half our population and producing nearly all that this country exports, to concern themselves about railroads or banking systems. While railroad magnates are watering their stock the farmer must be kept busy watering his own stock. While the bankers' associations are manipulating the currency of the country and looking after the interest of the dear farmers he would mercifully relieve the farmers of the very important duty of looking after their own interests that are so closely connected with a proper financial system. Does Mr. Morton approve of bankers' associations or railway associations or bar associations or labor organizations? Itwould be interesting for Mr. Morton to inform the public just what organizations the Department of Agriculture would recommend and what organizations it would put under the ban."

COUNTY ITEMS.

No new developments have been reported in the Healdsburg robbery case in which that city loses $3,500.

Ex-Marshal John M. White of Santa Rosa has been appointed to a position in the United States Mint, San Francisco.

Alfred Jacobs, the young horse thief recently convicted in this county, has been sentenced to two years in San Quentin.

Patrick Loftus, a well-to-do rancher, living between Stoney Point and Petaluma, was thrown from his wagon near the latter town at 9 o'clock on Friday night of last week and instantly killed.

Chas. Ingram of Petaluma, charged with horse-stealing, and who was released on a bail bond of $250, has skipped out. His preliminary examination was to have taken place last Saturday in Petaluma before Judge Scudder.

John Mize attempted to commit suicide in Santa Rosa last Sunday morning by shooting himself in the forehead with a pistol. The weapon was pointed in the direction of where the man was supposed to have brains, but his skull was so thick the bullet failed to penetrate the cranial cavity and the ammunition was wasted.

The bondsmen of young Worth, who killed a man in Cloverdale a few years ago, and who was released on $3000 bonds to answer to the charge of manslaughter, and who jumped his bail, have just paid into the County Treasury $3421.85, the amount of the bond and accruing interest on the same. The county had to sue to recover the money and finally won in the Supreme Court. The bondsmen were M. Menihan, C. Worth, G. W. Cox and A. W. McPherson.

HEART DISEASE 30 YEARS.

GRAND ISLAND, NEB., April 8th, 1892.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I had been troubled with HEART DISEASE FOR THE LAST 30 YEARS, and although I was treated by able physicians and tried many remedies, I grew steadily worse until I WAS COMPLETELY PROSTRATED AND CONFINED TO MY BED WITHOUT ANY HOPE OF RECOVERY. I would have very bad sinking spells, when my pulse would stop beating altogether, and it was with the greatest difficulty that my circulation could be started, which CURED me back to consciousness again. While in this condition I tried your NEW HEART CURE, and began to improve from the first, and now I am able to do a good day's work for a man 68 years of age. I give DR. MILES' NEW HEART CURE all the credit for my recovery. It is over six months since I have taken any, although I keep a bottle in the house in case I should need it. I have also used your NERVE AND LIVER PILLS, and think a great deal of them. Z. AVERY.

We have received a copy of the Technical Society of the Pacific Coast, a monthly publication, in which is to be found an able article on country road construction from the pen of Otto Von Geldern and J. There has been a big tumble in the price for Tokay grapes in Chicago the past week, and many of our vineyardists who expected to clear $75 to $80 per ton on their shipments East through the commission house of Porter Bros., will receive scarcely anything. Those who shipped before the tumble will realize between $40 and $75 per ton net.

An effort is being made to boom a County Exhibit at the Midwinter Fair in Santa Rosa. With commendable enterprise the Democrat of that city is receiving subscriptions to help the exhibit along. The people up that way, however, are subscribing very slowly, and the amounts set opposite the names of donors, many of whom are wealthy and prominent men, are ridiculously small. Up to date only $75.50 has been donated.

Harry Fisheer and wife have assumed sole control and ownership of the Sonoma House in this place. The hotel is being entirely overhauled and renovated, and will be open to the public next week. It is the intention of Mr. and Mrs. Fisheer to make the Sonoma House a first class resort. The new host and hostess are well known to Sonoma Valley people, among whom they are very popular, having resided among us for ten years.

One of the greatest bargains ever offered in Sonoma city real estate is advertised in another column. The property, which consists of twelve acres of rich garden land, will be sold for $1,250 and not one cent less. It is known as the Catholic Church property and is located within a stone's throw of the High School and public school. On the place are several fine springs of pure, sparkling water and the land is admirably adapted for a vegetable or small fruit garden or chicken ranch. It would also make a beautiful residence property. The land is assessed at $1,200. This offering is exclusively in the hands of H. H. Granice, real estate agent. For further particulars apply at this office.

There was a man in our town,
He was so wondrous wise,
He swore by all the fabled gods,
He'd never advertise.

His goods were advertised one day,
And thereby hangs a tale;
The ad was set in nonpariel,
And headed "Sheriff's Sale."

MIDWINTER FAIR.

An Appropriation by the Supervisors Favored by Many in this Valley.

Next Tuesday the Supervisors of Sonoma county will be waited upon by a committee of prominent citizens from various parts of the county and asked to appropriate $2,000 or $3,000, to the end that Sonoma county be enabled to make a creditable exhibit among the other counties of the State at the coming Midwinter Fair.

For the most part the farmers and business men of Sonoma Valley are in favor of the appropriation. They say it will not do for Sonoma county to hold back when every other county in the State will be represented. That a rich county like Sonoma can well afford to spend two or three thousand dollars for so laudable a purpose.

The Midwinter Fair is one of the greatest undertakings ever inaugurated on the Pacific Coast and will no doubt culminate in a grand success. This being so, Sonoma county would look very small should it put the thumb of discontent in its mouth and like a spoiled and contrary child refuse to participate in what promises to be one of the grandest victories ever achieved by the enterprising people of California. Let the appropriation be made by all means.

J. K. Luttrell's Will.

The following is the will of the late J. K. Luttrell, which has been filed for probate in this county by F. M. Luttrell, son of deceased, who has applied for letters of administration. The will is dated San Francisco, June 15th, 1893, and was executed just before deceased sailed for far away Alaska to enter upon his duties as Commissioner of that Territory.

"Being about to depart for Alaska, and knowing the uncertainties of life, in case of my death I hereby request that my life insurance policy be given to my wife, Samantha J. Luttrell. That my ring be given to my grandson, John Francis Luttrell. That my gold watch, chain and locket be given to Paul S. Luttrell. That my gold headed cane be given to Frank M. Luttrell, and that my diamond pin be given to H. L. Luttrell. That my books be divided between my three sons, the law books going to H. L. Luttrell as his part of the books. That my guns and pistol be given to F. M. Luttrell. That all of my mining stock of every kind and quality go to my beloved wife. That my paintings be left to my wife, to be equally divided between Hattie and Nettie Luttrell.

Made this 15th day of June, 1893.

J. K. LUTTRELL.

That Merry-go-Round.

The merry go-round has been doing a rushing business for the past two weeks in this town and in consequence small change is becoming scarce hereabouts. The proprietors of the concern are not compelled to pay a city license and are having a soft "racket" at the expense of the our business people who have to "put up" to sustain the city government. We would suggest that the license ordinance be so amended as to gather in these merry-go-round fellows in the future to the end that we may not be considered a community of "hayseeds."

Tramps or "Examiner" Reporters.

Sonoma Valley has been over run with tramps the past few weeks, and almost every farm house feeds from two to five every day. It is said that while many are fed for humanity's sake others are given a good square meal for fear the tramp may be an Examiner reporter in disguise.

Fire in Healdsburg.

A fire in Healdsburg last Thursday morning destroyed $35,000 worth of property. Thirteen or fourteen business men were burned out. John McDonough, formerly a conductor on the Sonoma Valley Branch of the Donahue road, who lately purchased the Sotoyome Hotel in that place, was damaged to the extent of $10,000. Luckily, he was insured for $8,342.

An Epidemic of Colds.

During the past week many of our people have been suffering from severe colds, supposed to be the grip, which has been an epidemic for the past three winters throughout the North American continent.

Mrs. Callaghan—I want to get a pair of shoes for the little bye. Shopman—French kid, ma'am? Mrs. Callaghan (indignantly)—Indade not! He's me own son, and was born and bred in Ameriky.—Exchange.

City Trustees.

The Board of City Trustees met in regular monthly session last Wednesday evening, only three of the five members being present, to wit: Messrs. Trudgen, Seipp and Schocken.

In the matter of the assessment of the San Francisco and North Pacific Railway, Clerk Breitenbach reported that on the 21st of last month he received from the County Clerk of this county the assessed valuation of that railroad running through the city limits made by the Supervisors on the 25th of September. That he entered the assessment of said railroad upon the assessment roll as made by the City Assessor and on the 20th of September delivered the city's assessment book for the year 1893 to the Marshal, taking his receipt therefor. That by reason of so much delay he cannot now correct said assessment as said railroad has already paid its taxes and holds the receipt of the City Marshal therefor. No action was taken.

The Street Committee was authorized to construct a culvert of one-foot sewer pipe from Duhring's store across Napa street to the Post-office.

R. B. Lyon was engaged to overhaul the sheet-iron tanks recently donated to the city by the county for jail purposes and report next Friday if they can be used for the purposes intended. Also to give an estimate of the probable cost of the erection of the same in the City Pavilion.

A street lamp and post was ordered to be erected on First-street West near the railway depot grounds.

It was ordered that the new road in Mountain Cemetery be made more compact.

The Cemetery Committee and City Sexton were instructed to prohibit the taking of earth for filling in and leveling burial plots from any other place in the Cemetery except the south bank of the old wagon road running through the same.

The proposal of Geo. Spanning to grade First-street West north of the railroad track was laid over until the next meeting.

Ordinance No. 44 was read the first time and placed on file.

Andrew Goess appeared before the Board on behalf of the firemen, and requested that firemen who reside outside the city limits have their road poll tax refunded. No action was taken.

The following bills were allowed and ordered paid: F. Breitenbach, three month's salary, $25; G. W. Sparks, salary, $15; John Revie, hauling, $26; P. Baccala, labor, $10; Geo. Spanning, hauling, $44; A. J. Neal, hauling, $25; Wm. Linehan, sprinkling, $8.

Last Sunday the chimney of the City Bakery again caught fire, but was extinguished without the aid of the firemen. No damage. This is the third time within the past three years that the same chimney has been ablaze.

Stevenot, located in the western suburbs of town, was the scene of a pleasant gathering of a number of young folks, on last Tuesday evening, who had been invited to celebrate Halloween. All kinds of games appropriate to the evening were indulged in, together with singing and dancing. The house was handsomely decorated with evergreens, trailing vines and bright flowers, while fair Luna lent her silvery beams to brighten the occasion. The interior of this happy home presented a scene of brightness, gaiety, mirth and merriment for about five hours and every one seemed happy and glad. Choice refreshments were served early in the evening, after which the festivities were renewed and kept up until shortly after midnight. The following were those present: Mr. and Mrs. Stevenot. The Misses Stevenot, Clara Cheney, Katie McDonell, Pauline Bates, Addie de Luca, Jennie Gaines. Messrs. Lathrup Dunn, Eugene Donaldson, Johnnie McDonell, Frank Weems and Chas. Champlin.

For the benefit of those intercsted in getting up socials we give an account of a novel one which took place not long ago in San Jose. An admission of ten cents was charged for all over five years and ten cents a dish for ice cream. The novelty of the social is provided for after this fashion. Arrangements were made by which each lady and gentleman as they passed into the hall were provided with a bow and necktie. Of course these tiny gifts were carefully wrapped in neat packages and when opened by the respective recipients the gentleman and lady having bow and necktie to match will be partners for the evening. The rules of the social will make it incumbent on each gentleman to have his partner weighed and for every pound averdupois that she weighs over one hundred his lordship will be taxed one cent. This feature of the entertainment will prove most amusing and will afford a great deal of fun for all who attend.

SONOMA, SATURDAY, NOV. 4, 1893.

THE LARGEST PHOTOGRAPH.

How a Plate Seven Feet by Fifty Inches In Size Was Produced.

It is 7 feet long and 50 inches high and is a photograph of a relief map of the United States, showing the oil bearing districts. Photographers stand before the colored transparency in the north gallery of the Mines building and declare it to be the biggest thing in the exposition. And so it is from their standpoint. J. K. Hillers of the United States geological survey is the man who made the wonderful photograph.

The model relief map was started three years ago. It is made of wood veneers, one thirty-second of an inch thick, each thickness representing 100 feet of elevation. The map was built up of these veneers and then carved in relief and a plaster cast taken. With the light striking it from the northwest it was photographed, the lights and shadows giving it a beautiful tone. When the negative was transferred to paper, the states, lakes and names were drawn in, and a negative was taken from it 20 inches square. This negative was enlarged to the size of the transparency, 84 by 50 inches.

No ordinary camera could do the work, so the photographer made a camera of a room 12 by 15 feet in size. The room was blackened inside and made light and even air-tight. The shutter was placed in the window and the lens in the shutter. Mr. Hillers had three expert photographers assisting him.

The work was focussed on a ground glass plate the same size as the photograph. This was done by three men holding the plate and moving it back and forth until the proper focus was secured. Then the sensitive plate was made ready. This was a piece of American plate glass, three-eighths of an inch thick, made and polished for this particular picture. The photographers had to wait two months for proper conditions of light and temperature. A work of this nature had never before been attempted on such a large scale. Mr. Hillers was obliged to feel his way, for he did not know just how long the plate should be exposed. A test was first made with a small plate, and this gave him an approximate measure of time.

With rare good fortune the first exposure of the new plate was a success, and a beautiful photograph was secured. Then a specially arranged hose was turned against the big plate to wash away the chemicals. It took an hour to do this. After the toning process came the matter of varnish. This was the critical phase of the operation. The plate was laid on four rubber balls, one at each corner, and Photographer Hillers tilted it while an assistant poured on half a gallon of varnish. Success still remained with him, and the transparency was ready for its colors. It took four months from the beginning, when the first negative of the map was taken, to finish the transparency. It is valued at $5,000.—Chicago Record.

Result of One Committee's Efforts.

Ferdinand Hassler, the father of the United States coast survey system, was once waited upon by a committee of congress sent to inquire into the progress of the work. The committee reached New York and wended their way up stairs to the room where Hassler was drilling his classes and preparing them for the work. Hassler, who allowed no intruders, met them at the door and inquired their business. They answered that they had come to investigate. "What part of the work do you wish to inspect?" inquired the Swiss mathematician. Congress had no definite idea on the point. "Then you had better go and find out," returned Hassler as he shut the door in the faces of the astonished committee. The committee looked at each other and on second sober thought concluded that Hassler was about right and quietly wended their way down stairs and back to Washington.—San Francisco Argonaut.

"We've Beaten Them."

The following story of a suit for breach of promise, tried some years ago, was recently told by a relative of the defendant: The case began to look very much as if it should be won by the fair plaintiff, when one morning as the friend came down the street he observed the attorney for the defense waving his hat and wearing a happy expression of countenance. As he came near the attorney exclaimed: "We've beaten them! We've beaten them!" "How so?" queried the relative, wondering what new phase the case could have assumed. "She died last night," joyfully replied the attorney.—Buffalo Courier.

Covering Up Defects.

Apropos of the curly bangs, a woman tells a funny story. She met in the street the other day a neighbor's child, who had had typhoid fever and had only been about for a week or so. Mrs. S——, who had not seen her since her illness, stopped her and exclaimed, "Why, Mollie, how well you look, and how lucky it was you did not lose your hair!" The little one's eyes danced with mischief

"Ah, but I did!" she replied, with a laugh. And to Mrs. H——'s horror and fright she lifted off her jaunty sailor hat and made a low bow, with a perfectly bald and shining cranium.—New York Tribune.

How is This?

Something unique even in these days of mammoth premium offers, it is the latest effort of Stafford's Magazine, a New York monthly of home and general reading.

The proposition is to send the Magazine one year for one dollar, the regular subscription price; and in addition to send each subscriber fifty-two complete novels during the twelve months: one each week.

Think of it. You receive a new and complete novel, by mail, post paid, every week for fifty-two weeks, and in addition you get the magazine once a month, for twelve months, all for one dollar. It is an offer which the publishers can only afford to make in the confident expectations of getting a hundred thousand new subscribers. Among the authors in the coming series are, Wilkie Collins, Walter Besant, Mrs. Oliphant, Mary Cecil Hay, Florence Marryat, Anthony Trollope, A. Conan Doyle, Miss Braddon, Captain Marryat, Miss Thackery and Jules Verne. If you wish to take advantage of this unusual opportunity, send one dollar for Stafford's Magazine, one year. Your first copy of the magazine and your first number of the fifty-two novels (one each week) which you are to receive during the year will be sent you by return mail. Remit by P. O. My wife was troubled with nervousness about one year before she took Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, and at that time had very severe attacks of spasm, convulsion, and pains in different parts of the body; when in this state her lower jaws would set violently and set sometimes, bite her tongue, breathe heavily, then short, then seemed to stop entirely, get a wild look in her eyes and rolling around, then stop sometimes; it would take two men to hold her in bed otherwise her body would cramp and be so for two hours. She took but two bottles of the Nerve Tonic, which cured her entirely of all these torments, which myself and wife gladly testify it truly had the desired effect D. S. M'GILLIS.
